Dear Charles,

The small red dots on the map below shows where Cornish Moneywort (Sibthorpia europaea) has been found, including several small patches on a roadside bank between the castle and the reception hut. It is not an attractive plant but is called Cornish Moneywort because Cornwall is the best place in Britain to be able to find it. Cornish Moneywort grows in damp shady spots such as on the banks of small streams, valley bottom marshes and in rushy meadows. The photograph was taken at the top of a flush site high in the field to the west of West Portholland.

Best wishes,

Colin
